

Adverbs: Still, Anymore

FORM:

STILL ANYMORE

USE:

“Still” has several grammatical jobs, but here we will concentrate on its role as an adverb. It is used to show that something started in the past or was true in the past, and is continuing at the time you speak about it or is true now.

“Still” shows that someone or something has NOT changed.

“Anymore” is used in negative sentences to show a change in a situation or activity. Something was true in the past but is not true now. “Anymore” is used at the end of sentences and clauses.

EXAMPLES:

Is Marie still here?

Yes, she's still here. (She was here before and is here now).

No, she isn't here anymore. (She was here before and is NOT here now)

Complete the following sentences using either STILL or ANYMORE.

- A: Does Karine _____ work here? B: Oh yes, she _____ works here.
A: But Emma doesn't work here _____.
- A: Does she _____ live in Salem? B: No, she doesn't live there _____.
- A: Does Joe _____ make his own wine? B: Yes, he _____ does.
- A: Will you _____ be here next year? B: No, I won't be here _____.
- A: Where will you work after you leave here? B: I _____ don't know what I'm going to do.
- A: He can't afford to keep his sports car _____. B: Unfortunately, he _____ hasn't found anyone to buy his car.